The Monkey and the Crocodile

Monty is a sweet and friendly monkey. He lives on a banana tree near a river and eats sweet bananas every day.

One day Crocky crocodile comes under the tree. Monty asks him, "Hey! Who are you? What are you doing here?"

Crocky says, "I am Crocky. I live on the other side of the river with my friend. I have been searching for food since morning, but can't find anything to eat. I am very hungry and tired."

Monty feels bad for Crocky and gives him some bananas to eat. Crocky is very happy. He thanks Monty for the tasty bananas and becomes his friend.

One day, Crocky takes some bananas for his friend as a gift. The friend eats all the delicious bananas. After eating them, he thinks to himself, "Monty eats these sweet bananas every day. How tasty and sweet he will be to eat!"

Next day, the friend thinks of a plan. He says to Crocky, "Why don't you invite Monty for lunch? He gives you bananas every day. You should also treat him. It will be a good way to thank him." Crocky gets ready and goes to get Monty.

Crocky invites Monty for lunch. Monty takes some bananas with him and sits on Crocky's back to go to his house.

Soon they reach Crocky's house where the friend is waiting for them. The friend greets Monty and tells him to turn around to see what all he has got to eat for the party. As soon as Monty turns around, the friend opens his mouth wide to eat him. Crocky sees what his friend is trying to do. He screams, "Monty, quickly jump onto my back. This crocodile is a crook. He wants to eat you." Monty runs and jumps onto Crocky's back.

Crocky takes Monty back to the banana tree. He says, "Monty I am very sorry for putting your life in danger. I did not know that crook wanted to eat you. I will never meet him again." Monty hugs Crocky and thanks him for saving his life. From that day, Crocky also starts living near the banana tree with Monty.

Moral of the story: A good friend can never let anyone harm you.
